

Community Schools Progress Report

Indicators of Engagement, Planning and Early Progress for Philadelphia's Community Schools during the 2016-17 School Year

November 2017

Introduction

Philadelphia's Community Schools initiative was launched in 2016 as the newly-elected Mayor Jim Kenney took office. The city's Community Schools are public schools in which a full-time coordinator works with the school and community to first identify the most pressing needs of students, their families and community members, and then to coordinate service providers and City agencies to bring services into the school to address those needs. The Mayor's Office of Education (MOE) coordinates the city's Community Schools initiative and works closely with the School District of Philadelphia.

Similar efforts in other cities underscore the importance of considerable strategic planning and community engagement as a foundation for the development of strong and sustainable community schools. In partnership with Philadelphia's Mayor's Office of Education, Research for Action (RFA) developed this Community Schools Progress Report to track the early planning and implementation of Philadelphia's Community Schools initiative and assess progress against national best practices.

This project was made possible through support from the Ford Foundation.

About the Community Schools Progress Report

This report tracks progress of the Community Schools initiative at two levels: 1) City of Philadelphia's Mayor's Office of Education (MOE) central staff and 2) the first cohort of nine Community Schools announced in the summer of 2016. Each level of assessment contains the elements, benchmarks and indicators that characterize the launch of a successful community school according to best practices and research conducted on similar efforts.

How We Assessed Progress

Philadelphia's Community Schools initiative was assessed against three levels of metrics:

1. Elements are the broad categories of work to be completed during the initial phase of the initiative.
2. Benchmarks are used to track progress on each element.
3. Individual indicators are used to gauge whether the benchmarks are being achieved.

As outlined in the Progress Report Key in Figure 1, the number of indicators that were addressed determined the rating on the applicable benchmark, and the number of benchmarks addressed determined the rating on the applicable element. Each element is given a rating of "on track," "emerging," or "area for growth." It is important to acknowledge that work will continue on many of the benchmarks and indicators included in the progress report.

Data Elements

The elements, benchmarks and indicators included in the Progress Report are based on promising practices documented by leading organizations in the field (e.g., National Coalition for Community Schools) and other communities that have already implemented similar initiatives (e.g., Cincinnati). Because the precise shape of any community schools initiative is influenced in part by its unique local context, the specific indicators chosen for this report were informed by extensive input from the Mayor's Office of Education.

The information used to complete the Community Schools Progress Report was drawn from the following sources:

1. Publicly available city and school-level documents
2. Information provided in writing by staff in the Mayor's Office of Education in response to individual indicators
3. A needs assessment questionnaire completed by community school coordinators, and
4. Interviews with community school coordinators.

Prior to release, drafts of the Community Schools Progress Reports were reviewed by the Mayor's Office of Education and individual community school coordinators for accuracy. For further detail on the data collection tools used and the definitions for each of the indicators, please reference the codebooks and glossary available here.

Progress Report

Section 1: Mayor's Office of Education Progress Report

As the managing organization for the Community Schools initiative in Philadelphia, the Mayor's Office of Education (MOE) is the primary driver of the work. While standards at the system or city level are not as well established as those for individual community school sites, the elements and benchmarks below outline established best practices for a citywide coordinating entity in the first year of a Community Schools initiative.

This section is meant to clearly identify the progress that was made by the Community Schools initiative during the 2016-17 school year, as well as areas of work that continue to emerge. In order to establish the foundation for such an initiative, it is important to address a number of key elements of the model. Staff capacity at the city and individual school levels needs to be developed. A campaign of community engagement is also essential to develop shared leadership and vision for the initiative and build public support. The first cohort of community schools needs to be selected in an open application process. Due to the essential nature of the needs assessment process, the managing organization can provide assistance to individual school coordinators with data collection. Finally, expected outcomes and plans for initiative sustainability need to be determined from the beginning.

Element 5. School and Community Data Collection Support

ON TRACK

The Mayor's Office of Education collected data from a number of different sources and developed survey instruments and interview questions to inform the needs assessment and strategic planning process at each community school.

Benchmark	Indicators	Rating
Provide Coordinators with existing data on each Community School	Collect demographic and academic data, such as student enrollment, demographics and proficiency levels of state standardized tests
Provide Coordinators with existing data on surrounding neighborhood	Collect community health and wellness data, such as U.S. Census data on poverty, unemployment, and health conditions

Element 6. Outcomes, Measures and Improvement Planning

EMERGING

The Mayor's Office of Education is in the process of developing short and long term outcomes, measures and data collection processes to monitor the progress and impact of the Community Schools initiative.

Benchmark	Indicators	Rating
Identify short and long term outcomes and measures	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <input checked="" type="checkbox"/> Identify short term outcomes, such as increases in: the number of services offered to and accessed by students, families and the community; family satisfaction with and engagement in the school <input type="checkbox"/> Identify measures to monitor progress on short term outcomes <input checked="" type="checkbox"/> Identify long term outcomes, such as improved: attendance; academic development; physical, social and emotional health; school climate and community safety <input type="checkbox"/> Identify measures to monitor progress on long term outcomes <input checked="" type="checkbox"/> Outcomes have been developed in collaboration with stakeholders from across the city

Establish continuous improvement processes	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <input type="checkbox"/> Use outcomes data to track progress and continually improve the initiative <input type="checkbox"/> Regularly report outcomes data to the general public and media <input checked="" type="checkbox"/> Develop processes for collecting and analyzing feedback from Community School Coordinators, school faculty and staff and members of the community <input checked="" type="checkbox"/> Use feedback to continually improve the initiative <input type="checkbox"/> Select an external evaluator to study and provide feedback on the impact and implementation of the initiative

Element 7. Financial Resources to Sustain Community School Initiative

ON TRACK

The Community Schools initiative is primarily funded through the city's tax on sweetened beverages, but in order to sustain and expand the services provided, the Mayor's Office of Education has begun exploring additional revenue streams from public and private sources.

Benchmark	Indicators	Rating
Evaluate existing funding sources and identify potential new funding sources	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <input checked="" type="checkbox"/> Assess the adequacy of the Community School initiative's existing funding levels from both public and private sources <input checked="" type="checkbox"/> Identify potential new sources of public funding to support the initiative <input checked="" type="checkbox"/> Explore potential new private sources of funding to support the initiative (e.g., foundations)
Develop and secure additional funding to sustain the initiative	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <input checked="" type="checkbox"/> Work with policymakers to develop public funding streams <input checked="" type="checkbox"/> Secure additional public funding <input checked="" type="checkbox"/> Apply to private organizations to secure additional funding streams <input type="checkbox"/> Secure additional private funding <input type="checkbox"/> Work with community schools to secure school-specific funding <input checked="" type="checkbox"/> Assist partners in identifying and applying for potential funding sources <input checked="" type="checkbox"/> Develop a plan to sustain the Community School initiative in the long term, including funding for both central office and school-based staff and programming
Develop budgets for the initiative	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <input checked="" type="checkbox"/> Develop annual budgets for Community Schools initiative <input type="checkbox"/> Include both public and private revenue streams in annual budgets <input type="checkbox"/> Work with coordinators and community school committees to develop annual budgets for school level programs based on additional funding resources secured

Section 2: Community School Site-Level Progress Report

This section is meant to clearly identify the progress that was made by each community school during the 2016-17 school year, as well as areas of work that continue to emerge. In such an initiative, each community school also has foundational work to do in the first phase. The Coalition for Community School Standards emphasizes the need for collaborative leadership, data collection on the needs of the school and community as well as the existing assets to address those needs. It is also critical to set goals for the community school based on those needs and develop a process for monitoring progress toward those goals. Further, the community schools model is based on the development and support of external partnerships with organizations that come into the school and neighborhood to provide needs-based services as well as ongoing engagement with stakeholders from the school and community. While this is not an exhaustive list of the standards in the field, the elements and benchmarks outlined below include the milestones that align to Philadelphia's Community Schools model in its first year.
